Scholarly writing is an essential academic skill, and can be useful for practitioners and others who want to share achievements in practice or debate change in policy. This two-hour workshop will focus on the manuscript process from the editorial perspective.

This workshop will include short presentations, interactive writing exercises and open discussion. You will:

- Consider how to write with a journal and readers in mind
- Explore mind mapping
- Develop a methodical approach to writing an article
- Learn how to produce a working abstract.

Delegates are encouraged to bring along an idea for an article, a title and/or a summary/abstract of work they are seeking to publish.
