Research Workshop: Research with Older People – Problems and Pitfalls

Hear from leading expert

Professor Leon Flicker
Professor of Geriatric Medicine
Director, Western Australian
Centre for Health & Ageing;
Centre for Medical Research
University of Western Australia

Professor Leon Flicker has trained clinically in research in Sydney, Newcastle and Melbourne and was appointed inaugural Professor of Geriatric Medicine at the University of Western Australia in 1998. He established a productive research unit aimed at translational issues focusing on the health needs of older people culminating in 2006 at the Western Australian Centre for Health and Ageing at the University of Western Australia. Leon remains a practicing geriatrician and is Head of Inner City Geriatric Services at Royal Perth Hospital. Leon has served on numerous government committees addressing the health needs of older people. He is a Past President of the Australian and New Zealand Society for Geriatric Medicine. He has published over 250 peer-reviewed articles addressing a wide variety of health issues in older people

There is a general belief that research on older people is easy, and that it is rarely undertaken because of disinterest. Although the allocation of resources to ageing research in Australia has been meagre, research on older people is also more complicated than research on the young and middle aged.

Loss of physiological reserve in multiple systems, the interaction between diseases and treatments, and decline in function and special senses all provide challenges.

There is a mistaken belief that older people should be 'shielded' from research which does not allow older people to choose for themselves. Some examples of these issues will be provided and workshop participants are encouraged to present their own experiences.
